

This summer, Jane Street is hosting the second annual Jane Street Women in STEM event, and we are inviting women between their senior year of high school and freshman year of college to spend a couple of days in our New York City headquarters to learn more about what we do. Students who are selected to attend this event will receive an in-depth look into the ways we use math, computer science and probability concepts in trading, as well as insight into the different roles that exist within our firm. Over the course of two days, participants will hear from and interact with various traders and technologists, and learn how they transitioned from their college careers in STEM fields to a career at Jane Street.

Some highlights of the event include a talk from Sandor Lehoczky about selection bias and an all-female panel explaining the different roles at Jane Street, including trading, software development, quantitative research, compliance and accounting. We will also enjoy a night of bowling, which will provide another great opportunity to speak with Jane Street and the other women attending the event.

Selected students will arrive in New York the evening of August 3rd and will depart the evening of August 5th. All travel to and from New York, housing and meal expenses will be covered by Jane Street. Our office is in the heart of the Financial District, and the hotel is approximately 2 blocks from our office.

To apply, please email womeninstem@janestreet.com with a resume and a brief statement (250 words or less) that tells us about yourself, how you heard about the event, and why you would like to attend.

Space is limited and attendance will be confirmed closer to the date. The deadline to apply for this event is Friday, July 4th.
